

Understanding Toronto's mid-rise condo revolution

Condo trends.
'People are looking for an alternative to high-rise living'

DUNCAN MCALLISTER
life@metronews.ca

When you think about Toronto's red hot condo boom, what likely comes to mind is skyscraper point towers and cranes against the sky.

But the rapid proliferation of mid-rise condo developments is becoming a new trend in GTA real estate. You see them sprouting up all across the city and beyond, and for condo buyers, they have several advantages.

So what constitutes a mid-rise? The city of Toronto classifies them as a building having between four and 12 storeys.

Shane Fenton is the VP of Reserve Properties that specializes in creating boutique mid-rise designs in established neighbourhoods.

He says they have much less impact on the infrastructure of an existing neighbourhood as opposed to a 40-storey tower.

"It's a modest sense of intensification, where as opposed to going in with a massive project, the great thing about mid-rise development is it allows you to intensify the city of Toronto on a piece-by-piece basis in a very modest standpoint."

Over the last five to 10 years, if you've wanted to live in a condominium you'd have to relocate to a different part of town.

Compared to high-rises, mid-rise condos are more readily constructed in existing, established neighbourhoods. This allows empty-nesters or their children to purchase housing close to the neighbourhood that they know or were raised in.

"What we're seeing now is an advent or demand from people to want to be closer. They want to have an alternative form of housing style but they still want to be closer to the neighbourhood that they've grown up (in) and that they're connected to where their friends and family are located," says Fenton.

Roland Rom Colthoff agrees. "I think people are looking for an alternative to high-rise living, so they're looking for a building that fits into the existing neighborhoods that they understand and know and want to be part of, for the shopping reasons, or lifestyle or near a school or whatever it is. And there's relatively limited areas where you can put the new towers."

As an architect and director of RAW Design, Colthoff is no stranger to designing mid-rises in Toronto.

"We have 109 Ossington, we have the Lakehouse and Bellefair in the beaches, we have one called Beach Hill at Woodbine and Gerrard, we have one called Howard Park that just got approved by city council today, out at Roncesvalles and Dundas, and we're looking further afield up to Eglinton and St. Clair. So they've largely been clustered downtown but are spreading out more as people understand the concept better."

Bellefair mid-rise condo in the beaches. HANDOUT

BEST REST EVENT

WHITE GOOSE FEATHER DUVET $49⁹⁹ ANY SIZE Reg. $99⁹⁹

1000 THREAD COUNT COTTON SHEET SETS $89⁹⁹ QUEEN OR KING Reg. up to $249.99 AVAILABLE IN WHITE OR IVORY

MYSTICAL POCKET COIL EUROTOP MATTRESS

CASTLEBRIDGE MEDIUM FIRM TIGHT TOP MEMORY FOAM